If you do not know what 1010! have, then click away from this story right now. This mobile phone app from Gram Games is so addictive it will ruin your life and make your friends hate you. Remember what happened when you were introduced for the first time in Candy Crush Saga? Or in 2048? Are you talking points? It's much worse than that. A typical reference to Twitter 1010 looks like this: - Bianca Ramirez (@heyyitsbiancaa) May 24, 2015As Jillian Lyle wrote on Odyssey recently: I've ruined the lives of other peoples by persuading them to get the game and start playing it. I apologize if you are one of these people. The importance of beating a friend's high score to 1010! is not unexplained; this is an evil cycle of unhealthy competition. Am made my life's goal to beat my boyfriend 1010! which is very good. This woman is now fixing down Alarm 15 minutes early in the morning to get extra games. That's so bad. People go without sleep as they play it: -jilaine martin (@Jilaineee) April 27, 2015Mujs name is Jim - hi Jim! - And I'm addicted to 1010. I can confess, it's strangely hard to go to bed at night when your phone is right there and you can only fit one more game in 1010 in OK, just one more then. Maybe one more -. In 1010 was created in 2014 by a tiny Turkish game developer, Gram Games, which was running out of money. The game was coded and launched in one month, at a time when Gram Games had only $25,000 left in the bank. It saved the company by becoming a viral hit Asia.Now the game seems to be working its way around the world. I first noticed people doing it on the London Underground and was actually introduced to it by a friend in Ireland. But none of my colleagues in the US seem to have encountered it yet. GramGames 1010 is based on the souped-up version of Tetris. But it doesn't do the game justice. If Tetris sounds dull, remember that Candy Crush was a souped-up version of Bejeweled, and 2048 was a souped-up version of Threes, and crack a souped-up version of powdered cocaine. The first is not a guide to the addictive power of the latter, in other words. In 1010, you need to fill an empty grid with blocks of different shapes, which at the same time are presented three. Colors are not relevant, but blocks must fit together to complete the row or column. Every time you finish the line, the line disappears and you get more space to work. The more space you create, the more points you will get. It feels even easier than Tetris because you go at your own pace – blocks are not going from the sky at their own frequency. But the toned-down pace is part of an addictive twist in 1010, because if you make a mistake, you can't blame the game. Just yourself. Download 1010 from the App Store or Google Play.The game doesn't even make sense. You just keep playing until you break your previous high score. It happens forever. Some people report scores of 150,000 or more (a typical game newbie goes for 500 or so). In the matter of public service, I spent last weekend researching 1010. I put this together from my own experience, from advice from friends, and from websites like those that offer different success strategies. Starting with the most obvious strategies in the first place, and working toward more complex procedures... 1. Focus on line creation, not blocks. You will be tempted only to fill the space with blocks, but only blocks hurt you - you need to clear the lines, not blocks in the room.2. You try to clear rows and columns. Another Duh! Moment for New Players: It's not Tetris - you can go up and down as well from side to side to clear the line. GramGames 3. GramGames 3. Perform rows and columns at the same time. Imagine both types at the same time, although it is easier to penetrate all horizontal or vertical 4. Consider all three options before moving. When you've got a lot of space, it's tempting to just dump pieces of the game to get things moving. Don't do it. Each block counts.5. Consider "no" all three options before moving. The game won't get new blocks until you've used three sets. And many promising gameplay is over by accident because you forgot to use this awkward L-shaped first.6. If possible, always remove the line. Space is the key. Don't leave a blank line because you think you can get it later—the game works against you.7. Work from the corners. This will give you both vertical and horizontal options in any given motion. 8. 2x2 square is your best friend. You can clear a lot of lines by stacking them next to each other.9. Small L shapes fit together to form 2x3 rectangles. So you can add them to columns and bands made up of 2x2 squares.10. The big L-shape can be awkward. Consider the piece first before slotting in straights and squares. GramGames 11. GramGames 11. Always leave a hole in the large 3x3 squares. The sudden emergence of a giant 3x3 block is almost always a game-killer. These things are now your most hated nemesis. Remember, you create space instead of filling out space. Therefore, always leave them a nine-square hole.12. They, or one square, are rare. Use them to complete impossible lines. 13. If you can handle the corners first, do it. Use L-shaped corners whenever possible.14. Do not leave separate rooms and one unbound block. One block is rare, and an unbound single block will require two more pieces on both sides before it can make a line.15. Good luck! The game requires skill, but it's also serving you random blocks, so you'll need luck to beat your latest score. Score.
